

Hi!

I am a dragon fruit, I am also called a 'pitaya'.

I am an exotic fruit. I have a unique appearance.

I'm native to Central and South America, but I am now grown all over the world, for example, in South-East Asia, the Caribbean, Australia.

I taste sweet, a little bit like the combination of a kiwi fruit and a pear.

You can eat my pulp, but not the skin!

Hi!

I am a durian. I originally come from places like Borneo and Sumatra.

I am quite large and I am known for my particular strong smell. My aroma is so intense that I have been strictly prohibited from several public transportation systems across Asian countries (e.g. in Thailand, Japan, and Hong Kong).

Cut out to add to your fruit garland!

Hi!

I am a persimmon. I look like a tomato, but I am not!

There are two main types of persimmons: Hachiya and Fuyu. I am originally from China.

You can eat me raw or cooked. Do you think you can eat my skin? You can!

Hi!

I am a lychee. I originally come from south China.

On the inside I am of clear, pinkish-white color. On the outside I have a hard, spiky shell that you peel off.

Cut out to add to your fruit garland!
